Reursa is a public branch of Incasòl. Acting on behalf of the Catalonian government, it is dedicated to urban problems and coordinates important urban-planning programmes for towns, cities and regions. In an area of 1,100 square metres, the architects created offices and workstations mainly illuminated by daylight. Partition walls and sliding walls made of glass ensure transparency in the interior areas as well. Cabinet walls were given preference as room dividers and a means of creating privacy.

open mind office swivel chairs and matching open up visitor chairs were used for the seating.
